

What is the role of parish records in family history research?

Before civil registration commenced, church records of baptisms, marriages and burials are the main means of tracking the major life events. These records can also supplement or substitute for missing civil records.

What parish records are available for the different States and various denominations?

Below is a selective list of the records held by State Library of Queensland. New records are increasingly available. Check our One Search online catalogue for additional titles <http://onesearch.slq.qld.gov.au>

New South Wales

NSW included Port Phillip until 1851 and Moreton Bay until 1859.

The first NSW Acts to regularize recording of births, deaths and marriages

1825	Church of England
1834	Roman Catholic Church (Church of Rome)
1834	Presbyterian Church (Church of Scotland)
1839	Wesleyan Methodist Church
1840	Congregational or Independent and Baptist denominations

Church records were made before these years including during the period of the First Fleet but they were not always retained.

Church records are available on microfilm for the period until 1856. They are indexed in the NSW Pioneer Index 1788-1888 on fiche, CD-ROM and online at <http://www.bdm.nsw.gov.au/Pages/family-history/family-history.aspx>.

Information Leaflet No 35 from State Records (formerly State Archives) of NSW (MFA 929.3944 1984) provides further information on the historical background of these records and how to work from the indexes to the original church records, including the microfilm numbers. Ask for it at Desk in the Micrographics area on Level 3.

Some records from before 1856, usually after registry volume 123, are not available because they are under the control of the Registry. Some records after 1856 might be available on film. There are notes in the handbook advising on dealing with inconsistencies in the filming of the records.

Mutch card indexes [microfilm] (MFL 929.3944 1974) on AO/SR reels 2125-2129 are supposed to cover most parish record references 1787-1828. Check the Microform Quick Look for Family History held at the Desk in the Micrographics area for further information.

Anglican

The Anglican Church of Australia. Diocese of Newcastle. Parish registers 1826-1986 [microfilm] (MFL 929.39442 1986) are available as a separate run. The Microform Quick Look for Family History held at the Desk provides a guide as to which records are held, for what area, and the specific time periods and events covered for that area.

Parish register index Church of England Diocese of Canberra and Goulburn [microfiche] (MFC 929.39447 1999) mostly covers the period 1850s to 1920.

Tasmania

The Tasmanian pioneers index 1803-1899 [CD-ROM] (QCFS 929.3946 2003); and [microfiche] (MFCB 929.3946 1993) indexes birth, death and marriage records for the period. The original registers are located at the Tasmanian Archive and Heritage Office, and the State Library holds a microfilm copy of them. The index provides registration numbers and the handbook Registrar-General's Department Pre-1900 births, deaths and marriages records (MFA 929.3946 1985) gives the matching microfilm numbers and provides guidance in searching the film. The handbook is available at the Desk in the Micrographics area. This information is also available through the Tasmanian Archive and Heritage Office Tasmanian Name index, https://talis.ent.sirsiidynix.net.au/client/en_AU/names/, which includes digitised images of the registers.

Civil registration commenced in Tasmania in 1838. The only records before this were church records. Some of these have been copied by the Registrar-General from before 1838 and after 1838 when civil records were missing.

The Colonial Tasmanian family links database, <http://portal.archives.tas.gov.au/menu.aspx?search=8>, links individuals with other members of their families living in Tasmania in the 19th Century. It has been developed by family historians associated with the National Heritage Foundation from the Archives Office of Tasmania records. It should be crosschecked with the Pioneer index for accuracy.

Another booklet, Church Registers held in Archives Office of Tasmania (PAM 929.1 1988) lists the registers held in denominational and then geographical order. Archives Office of Tasmania will do a search on request for records more than 35 years old.
