A guide to the Blue Books

The Blue Books (also known as Civil Establishment, Returns of the Colony, or Statistical Returns) were usually published annually. They listed most of the public servants currently employed by the government.

If your ancestors were government employees you may be able to trace their careers through the Blue Books.

What information can I find in the Blue Books?

The information found in these publications varies from state to state but may include:

- Name
- Position and department within the public service
- Salary (including allowances)
- Date when first appointed to current position
- Date when first appointed in the public service

Example from 1869 Blue Book of Queensland

Colonial Secretary - Police Department

This publication contains a wide variety of public service occupations including teachers, police, members of parliament, customs officials, postmasters and stationmasters. Each Blue Book contains an index of names at the beginning or end making it easy to locate individuals.

The Blue Books are usually (but not always) arranged by government department such as Marine Board, Treasury or Postmaster-General.

The Blue Books do not provide a comprehensive list of all government employees. They list mainly those positions that have higher status or perform clerical / administrative duties. For example in the railway department lengthsmen and labourers are not usually listed.

How can researchers access the Blue Books?

Most of the State Library of Queensland’s holdings of the Blue Books are found within government annual publications (usually the Votes and Proceedings for the Legislative Assembly). A list of these publications and the State Library’s holdings are outlined later. Sometimes the Blue Books are difficult to locate within these government publications and may require some searching.

A Biographers’ Index of Parliamentary Returns (New South Wales, Queensland & Victoria) 1850-1889 compiled by H.J. Gibney & N. Burns (FAMHIS 015.944 1969) contains the year, volume and page number reference to easily locate the Blue Books within in the Legislative Assembly Votes and Proceedings for Queensland, NSW, and Victoria between 1850 and 1889.
