Family History Cemetery records

What information can I find through cemetery records?

Cemetery records allow researchers to trace their ancestors to a particular area and time and may provide links to other members of the family buried in the same cemetery.

Published cemetery records can vary in the amount of information supplied. Cemetery records may contain the following:

- name of deceased
- age of the person at the time of death
- date of death and/or burial
- transcription of monumental inscription on the grave
- portion, plot and grave number within the cemetery
- names of others buried in the same grave

What cemetery records are available at the State Library of Queensland?

State Library holds a large number of published cemetery indexes for Australia and New Zealand. Consult our One Search online catalogue for our holdings <http://onesearch.slg.qld.gov.au>

Lists of cemetery records available at State Library on microform, in print, on CD-ROM and on the internet are held at the family history desk, level 3. One list covers Queensland and the other interstate. Some of our most popular indexes are listed below. Most are held in the family history area on level 3.

Australia

AGCI: Australasian genealogical computer index (series 5) Vol 1 [CD-ROM] (QCFS 929.394 2004)
Compiled by the Society of Australian Genealogists, the AGCI CD-ROM is a compilation of names from a large variety of sources that includes cemetery transcriptions (especially for New South Wales). An earlier edition (series 4) is available on microfiche.

AGCI: Australasian genealogical computer index Vol 3 [CD-ROM] (QCFS 929.394 2008)
This CD-ROM contains over 2.5 million names indexed from the collections of the Society of Australian Genealogists as well as other family history societies and libraries [in Australia and New Zealand], and includes 605,000 death and burial references. Data on this CD is new and does not replace data already published on AGCI Vols 1 and 2.

Queensland

Dern index Queensland : monumental inscriptions of 250 cemeteries [CD-ROM] (QCFS 929.509943 1999) It contains over 250 cemeteries from around Queensland, many in rural areas.

Queensland cemetery records series (FAMHIS 929.5)

Find My Past and Ancestry Library Edition, available onsite only, also hold cemetery records such as:

National burial index for England and Wales (available through Find My Past), contains approximately 13 million burial records from 1538 onwards.

Other tips

If you are unsure where your ancestor died, try looking at the electoral rolls just prior to their death. This should provide you with their address making it easier to establish the cemetery in which they may be buried.

Newspapers are another useful source. Funeral notices will often state the final resting place of the recently deceased. Funeral director records may also provide you with a burial place.

Remember not all of our ancestors are interred in public cemeteries. In some cases family members buried their dead on their rural properties. Some churchyards also contain small cemeteries.
