So the kids stopped their game but could still hear a-thumping, and they all went to find who was BANGING and BUMPING.

Outside they saw possums all over the house, playing football with quolls and a small hopping mouse. 'SHOOSH!' said the children. 'Please try to be quiet. You might wake the baby with such a loud riot!'

Next they discovered a party of frogs in a pool wearing sunscreen and matching red togs. All the SPLOSHING and SPLASHING made such a loud sound. 'SHOOSH!' said the children. 'Stop messing around!'

Above them they heard all the bats in the trees, eating mangoes and singing with parrots and bees. 'This is too noisy!' the children called out. 'Please try to SHOOSH, there is no need to SHOUT.'

The cicadas were laughing and dancing in line as they kicked up their heels and shuffled in time. 'Must you do all this now?' said the kids in a huff. 'This has gone on all day and ENOUGH is ENOUGH.'

SHOOSH. SHOOSH. SHOOSH.

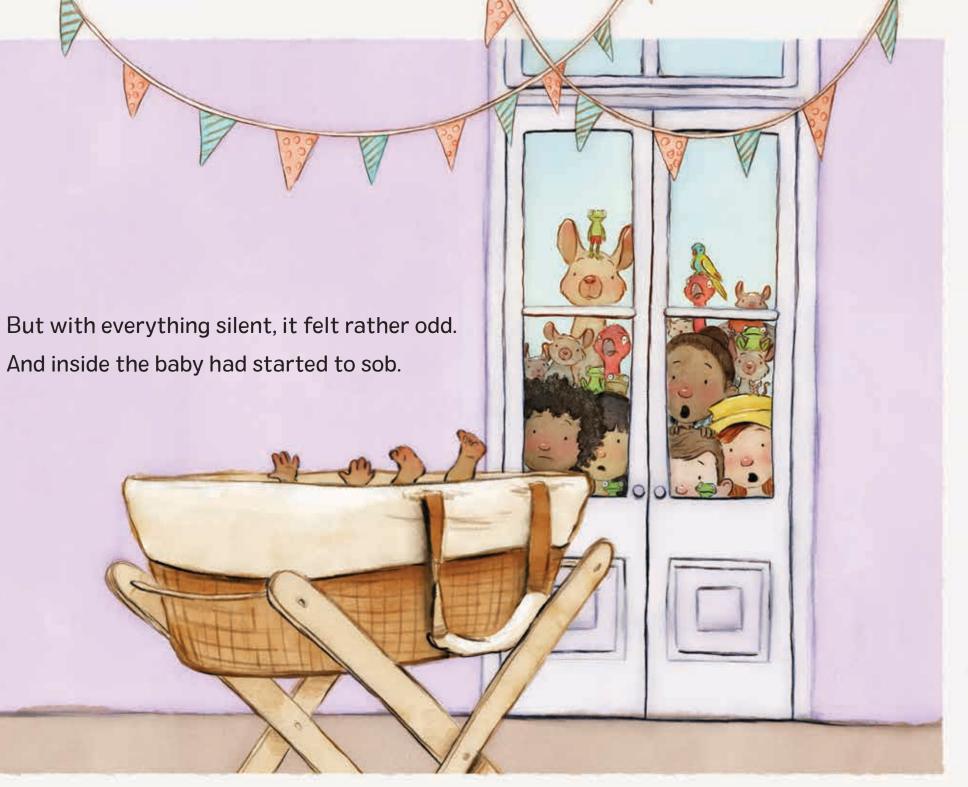

The cane toads were squealing and having a lark on a waterslide made from a slippery tarp. The kids crossed their arms and gave them a frown. 'This is really too much and you must KEEP IT DOWN!' A rafter of turkeys were cooking some food, which they scoffed down in gulps — not a single bite chewed! They GIGGLED and WARBLED and flapped in the breeze, and everyone begged them, 'No more of this, please!'

The last noise they heard was the loudest so far a chipper young wallaby playing guitar. She was WHOOPING and HOLLERING songs from the bush, and everyone said to her, 'SHOOSH, SHOOSH, SHOOSH, SHOOSH.'

The garden was finally quiet and calm. All of their SHOOSHING had worked like a charm.

'She enjoys all the noise!' they called to the crowd. 'If we want her to settle we need to be loud!' And they knew straight away that the right thing to do was to start the most marvellous

HULLABALOO

The shindig outside proved a lively event. But our baby just yawned, feeling SAFE and CONTENT. Now the noise from the garden was sounding just right, she closed both her eyes and SLEPT THROUGH THE NIGHT.
